FOREWORD

IMMEDIATELY after the publication of the second edition of his Manual of cultivated trees and shrubs<sup>1</sup> in 1940, Professor Alfred Rehder, then 76 years old, initiated work on the preparation of a bibliographic supplement as promised in the preface (p. viii). This large project was predicated on the idea that this comprehensive index should contain the names of all plants included in that work, including synonyms, exact citations as to their sources, and other bibliographic data. It soon became apparent, after having commenced to assemble the necessary data, that this projected work could hardly be treated as a simple supplement to the Manual and accordingly a much wider scope was given to the project. The synonymy proved to be much more voluminous than had been expected. Certain new plants had been introduced into gardens while various unlisted technical names for plants were located. Studies covering revisions of certain groups published after 1940 involved some changes in nomenclature and in arrangement. Certain other changes were necessary to bring the work up to date and to enhance its usefulness as a reference volume for the nomenclature of cultivated woody plants up to the end of 1947. The systematic arrangement of the families, genera, and species has remained approximately the same as in the manual except for certain changes rendered necessary by recent studies.

In the meantime Professor Rehder was retired from active service on August 31, 1940, he being then in his seventy-seventh year, the manuscript of this work then being only in its formative stage. Nevertheless he continued actively at work on this project, occupying his old desk at the institution and being provided with essential clerical assistance. Thus it is that the major part of this work was actually accomplished after the author retired from active service. It was his deep and abiding interest in problems of botanical nomenclature and bibliography that inspired him over the term of years involved to complete the manuscript and to see the work through the press, as well as his desire to produce a reference work that would be of permanent value to botanists and horticulturists.

The Arnold Arboretum has been an outstanding institution in the field of botanical bibliography, as witnessed by its sponsorship in preparing and publishing the remarkable Bradley bibliography (1911-18), which was the work of Professor Rehder,<sup>2</sup> its comprehensive library catalogue and supplement (1917-23),<sup>3</sup> and in its more recent publication of the Merrill-Walker work on the botanical bibliography of Eastern Asia (1938).<sup>4</sup> These are all standard reference works needed by working botanists and horticulturists everywhere, and now to this distinguished list is added the present work. It is an honor to the Arnold Arboretum to sponsor this work as one of its important contributions to botanical bibliography and nomenclature for the benefit of world botany and horticulture.

In this work an effort has been made to record the nomenclature of families and their subdivisions, to which comparatively little attention is given in most modern taxonomic publications. Also the nomenclature of subdivisions of species has been given due consideration. This is a controversial subject complicated by numerous proposed names in minor categories that were first mentioned but either not described or inadequately described in ephemeral publications such as nursery catalogues and price lists, names which can scarcely be considered as validly published. It is hoped that at the next International Botanical Congress a move will be made to eliminate such names from consideration in botanical nomenclature.

The compilation of this bibliography was accomplished in the excellent library of the Arnold Arboretum which ranks among the very best botanical libraries in the world, supplemented by the facilities of other Harvard libraries and those of Boston. Some work was done in the important libraries of New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. A serious effort was made to check each reference with the original work for completeness and accuracy. The actual location of the places of original publication of numerous new names, especially those in minor categories, has involved an enormous amount of time-consuming library research.

Publication of such an extensive technical volume as this one is was entirely beyond the budgetary limitations of the Arnold Arboretum. Thus it was that assistance was sought from friends and supporters of the institution on the basis that, as the actual preparation of the data was a labor of love on the part of the author, the least that the institution could do would be to provide the expenses of publication. It is a well known fact that in reference works of this type the actual demand is limited largely to specialized institutions, and hence the returns from sales hardly ever cover the actual cost of publication. In such cases subsidization is essential. Over the course of several years a restricted publication fund was built up with the printing cost of this work as the object. Support was forthcoming from 102 individuals and organizations of which I will, at this time, mention only two. In 1872 the Massachusetts Association for Promoting Agriculture received a bequest from François André Michaux of Versailles, France, son of André Michaux, author of the first descriptive flora of eastern North America (1803), the income to be utilized to support certain objectives. The Trustees of that society generously made a grant from the income of the Michaux fund which it is certain François André Michaux, because of his personal interests, would have thoroughly approved. The second item was a generous voluntary grant made by the Trustees of the Morton Arboretum, Chicago, Ill., in appreciation of the cordial relationships that have existed between the Arnold Arboretum and the Morton Arboretum from the time the latter institution was established in 1922.

While the manuscript was for the most part completed some time previous to the date indicated below, no move could be made as to actual publication during the war years because of restrictions on the use of paper. Even after the war closed conditions still remained unfavorable and the actual preparation of the printed text has progressed but slowly. The first proofs were not actually received until June, 1946. This delay in publishing has been unavoidable, but it has enabled the author to add data of one type or another in the interim between the completion of the original manuscript and the time of receiving the first page proofs.

On behalf of the Arnold Arboretum I wish to extend to the numerous individuals who contributed to the special fund my appreciation of the support that has rendered this publication possible, and to the author my congratulations on his ability to consummate such an extensive technical work, the preparation of which was initiated late in his productive life, and approximately at the time of his actual retirement from active service.

It is believed that in this work active botanists and horticulturists who are interested in nomenclature and in synonymy will find much of value. It is a monument to the personal interests of its author, his insistence on completeness and accuracy, and clearly indicates his devotion to his chosen profession, as well as his mastery of the details involved. It will take its place among the outstanding contributions of this, one of the oldest Arboretums in the world, to the field of botanical nomenclature and bibliography, for within its area it is the standard work of its kind being a pioneer publication in its field.

INTRODUCTION

THE PURPOSE of this bibliography is to give references to the sources of the botanical names, valid names and synonyms, of the woody plants cultivated in the cooler regions of the temperate zone of the northern hemisphere. This is the range covered by the writer's Manual of Cultivated Trees and Shrubs, and in a somewhat wider or partly more restricted sense, by numerous dendrological English, French, German and Russian publications. All the names found in the second edition of the Manual will be found in the present publication with full synonymy and with additional genera, species and varieties introduced or described up to the end of 1947. The nomenclature follows the rules adopted by the several International Botanical Congresses from 1905 to 1935 and embodied in the third edition of the Rules of Botanical Nomenclature published in 1935; they are supplemented by changes and additions made by the Congress of the same year and published in 1936 in the Proceedings of the Sixth International Botanical Congress (1:336-68) and incorporated in the unofficial special edition of the Rules issued by the American Society of Plant Taxonomists in 1947. The latter edition also includes (pp. 33-93) the names of further nomina generica conservanda published in the Kew Bulletin of 1940, pp. 81-130, voted upon by a Special Committee appointed by the Congress of 1935.

New nomina conservanda, nomina dubia, confusa and ambigua proposed by different authors in various publications after 1936 and not yet voted upon, have been accepted in this publication, if they can be expected to receive a favorable vote at a future Botanical Congress. So far no lists of nomina dubia, confusa and ambigua have been submitted to the Congress.

The systematic arrangement of the families, genera and species has remained approximately the same as in the Manual except for some changes made necessary by recent studies. An effort has been made to record the nomenclature and synonymy of families and their subdivisions, to which comparatively little attention is being paid in most modern taxonomic publications. Of the division above families only the main higher groups are cited; orders (in the sense of the Rules) are not listed at all, since they are only of secondary importance. Of the families, the more important synonyms are listed and particularly those ending in -aceae, which are the only ones here considered in regard to priority. Art. 23 of the Rules simply states that "names of families are taken from the name of one of their present or former genera and end in -aceae." This implies that the oldest family name with the suffix -aceae and based on a generic name should be considered the legitimate name. In his article "The nomenclature of plant families" T. A. Sprague (in Jour. Bot. 60: 69-73. 1922) takes a different view; he states that "the priority of a family name formed from that of a genus should date from its first publication with a diagnosis, notwithstanding that it may have appeared in the form of the plural of the genus or with some suffix other than -aceae. In such cases, the name of the original author should be cited in parentheses." There is nothing in the Rules to support that proposition and the parenthetical author has so far, only been used in transfers without change in spelling or form of the transferred name or epithet. Therefore, the oldest names based on a generic name and ending in -aceae have been accepted with the exception of some alternate names not ending in -aceae listed in Art. 23. Also the list of Nomina familiarum conservanda in Synopsis of proposals concerning nomenclature by T. A. Sprague, pp. 62-66 [1935] and voted upon by the Congress of 1935 (see Proc. Sixth Intern. Bot. Cong. 1: 358. 1936) has been accepted; the names in this list are mainly names in general use and employed by Bentham & Hooker f., Genera plantarum, and Engler & Gilg, Syllabus der Pflanzenfamilien of 1924. The list lacks the names of many important families at present generally accepted, but even so, it fortunately prevents a number of changes of generally accepted family names, particularly names proposed by Lindley in 1836 and later which are antedated by different validly published names proposed by Horaninov in his Primae lineae systematis naturae of 1834, a work overlooked by nearly all later authors. By some authors, names of families with an ending in French, German or any other language not Latin, and often with other differences in spelling, have been accepted as validly published, but names like Castaneacées can hardly be considered as conforming to the Rules, and if cited in this Bibliography are placed in brackets and treated as illegitimate synonyms. Of genera and species with their subdivisions, citation of full synonymy has been attempted with the exception of genera predominantly herbaceous or chiefly tropical and then reference is usually given to a place where a more complete synonymy can be found.

Under each genus a lectotype or standard-species has been cited. These lectotypes in some cases do not agree with those selected in the List of lectotypes of Linnaean genera proposed by A. S. Hitchcock and M. L. Green, published in the third edition of the Rules, pp. 139–143; this list has not been voted upon by the Congress nor critically studied by a Committee and is therefore not binding. In some cases, the acceptance of the lectotypes proposed in that list would lead to undesirable results, as e. g. in Sorbus, where S. domestica is listed as lectotype; this would result in the renaming of numerous species by those who divide Sorbus into several genera (see also Jour. Arnold Arb. 20: 270. 1939). Likewise in the genus Lonicera the acceptance of L. Caprifolium as lectotype would result in placing the majority of species under Xylosteon Mill., if Lonicera is split into two genera. Myrica, for which M. Gale is proposed as lectotype, is a similar case. The lectotypes, however, published with the nomina generica conservanda should be accepted, since those names have been voted upon and their confirmation includes the lectotypes which form an integral part of the list determining in many cases the generic concept.

In regard to subdivision of genera the wording of Art. 26 seems rather vague and the writer had proposed in 1939 (in Jour. Arnold Arb. 20: 269) for the Congress to be held in 1940 in Stockholm which was prevented from meeting by the outbreak of the second world war. In the present publication, in anticipation of an eventual revision of that article at the Congress to be held in 1950, it was considered best in order to avoid inconsistencies to use uniformly adjectives in plural for series and nouns for subgenera, sections and subsections. This also excludes such rather absurd names as Crataegus gruppe Crura galli Zabel and Crataegus §. Douglasii Loudon, which have been changed to C. ser. Crus-gallianae Rehd. and to C. ser. Douglasianae (Rehd.) Egglest.

In regard to subdivisions of species, it seemed practical to simplify matters and in accepted names to reduce a more complicated combination to a ternary name as permitted by Art. 28. Polynomial combinations, which, in some cases, run up to six epithets, as e. g. Saxifraga aizoon subsp. euaizoon var. typica subvar. brevifolia f. multicaulis subf. surculosa Engler & Irmscher may be accepted as classification of a certain plant, but are hardly suitable for practical use as a name. If a polynomial combination is to be reduced to a ternary name, the epithets between the specific and the last epithet may be cited either in parenthesis, or, as in the present work, added in quotation marks at the end of the citation. If cited in synonymy, the combination is given as published. Greek letters preceding a varietal epithet are considered the equivalent of varietas unless otherwise stated by the author and so are all trinomial combinations published before the beginning of the 19th century. Some later authors as Planchon and others have used Greek letters for subdivisions of different rank. Subdivisions of species preceded by a letter, a numeral or a symbol without indication of rank are considered, if later given a definite rank, as constituting a new grade, gradus novus, if the combination itself is not changed. (See also Jour. Arnold Arb. 8: 56–68. 1927.)

Terms for slight variations, as lusus, monstrositas, mutatio, have not been recognized and have been classed with forma. In some cases when it did not seem worth while to give an entirely new name to a quaternary combination of a horticultural form, as Thuja occidentalis Douglasii pyramidalis, which could not be reduced to a ternary combination on account of an earlier homonym for each of the two varietal epithets, the two epithets have been placed in quotation marks to indicate that the name does not constitute a botanical combination and that the plant should be regarded as a clonal garden form.

The publication of new combinations in the present work has been avoided and all necessary new combinations have been published elsewhere except changes of category without change of the combination itself, as the change of varietas to forma and subspecies to varietas and vice versa, which involves no change in the ternary name itself, e. g. the change of Taxus canadensis var. stricta Bailey to T. canadensis f. stricta (Bailey) Rehd. These changes are designated as gradus novus (see Jour. Arnold Arb. 22: 570. 1941; and 26: 67. 1945), which corresponds to L. H. Bailey's status novus (see Gent. Herb. 1: 8. 1920) referring to change of rank in general, while his translatio nova refers to transfer of epithets from one genus to another or from one species to another without change of rank; both these terms are usually included under combinatio nova. Under his status novus Bailey includes both, change of rank with or without change of combination, but it seems more correct to make a further distinction between transfers involving a change of the combination and those without change of combination for which the term gradus novus has been proposed as stated above.

Names of clones have not been listed, although they are occasionally mentioned, since they are not part of botanical nomenclature. There are, however, many cases where botanical names have been given to cultivated plants which at the time the name was given represented clones, but the names themselves are not those of clones and should be considered the name of a group of plants, which means that any plant identical or nearly identical may later be included in that group. This is in accordance with the purpose of botanical nomenclature which is classificatory, while the purpose of horticultural is selective and aims to give a name to a certain outstanding plant without consideration of other related plants. The clonal name, therefore, represents an individual plant, or, being propagated vegetatively, a part of the original plant. Its name should be a noun appended to the botanical or vernacular group name of the plant in question (see also Jour. Arnold Arb. 10: 65-68. 1929).

It may be noted here that rule b) under Nomenclature of Garden Plants (Internat. Rules Bot. Nomencl. ed. 3, p. 112. 1935) has been discussed in 1938 at the 12. Internat. Garenbau Kongr. Berlin, 1:457 (3) (1939) and it was agreed that paragraph b in the Rules for Nomenclature of Garden Plants [see Appendix VII in ed. 3, p. 112] should be omitted and that "only fancy names should in future be used." This conforms to the generally accepted usage that names undistinguishable from botanical names should be treated according to the rules of botanical nomenclature. To make a distinction in nomenclature between variations of wild and cultivated plants does not seem feasible. There is certainly no difference in the character and taxonomic status between Acer saccharum f. monumentale (Temple) Rehder and A. saccharum f. conicum Fernald, the first based on a cultivated plant and the second on a wild plant, nor between Ilex serrata f. xanthocarpa Rehd. and I. verticillata f. chrysocarpa Robinson, the first introduced from Japanese gardens and the second found wild in Massachusetts and New Hampshire and probably other localities.

Hybrids are cited under their binary names, if they have received one, followed by the names of the parents in alphabetical order in parentheses, or in brackets if the names of the parents were not given or were given differently in the original publication. If they have not received a binary name, they are cited by their formula. Not accepted as validly published, however, have been names consisting of a formula with a subdivisional name attached to the formula as Rosa canina × gallica b. Waitziana Keller and similar combinations (see Ascherson & Graebner, Syn. Mitteleur. Fl. 6, 1: 275. 1902; see also Rehder in Jour. Arnold Arb. 10: 59–60. 1929), since they cannot be justified by any article of the Rules, and would cause confusion since they are indistinguishable from a combination like Salix caprea L. × daphnoides var. pulchra (Wimm.) Garcke, which stands for a hybrid between S. caprea L. and S. daphnoides Vill. var. pulchra (Wimm.) Garcke. In this work the former have been distinguished by a colon inserted between the formula and the varietal epithet, e. g. "R. canina × gallica: b. Waitziana (Tratt.) R. Keller.

Intergeneric hybrids are designated by a name usually formed by a combination of the names of the parent genera or, in the absence of such a name, by a formula. The hybrids between species of different genera are treated under the intergeneric name like species under a generic name, or in the absence of an intergeneric name they are listed as a formula. See also Furtado in Repert. Sp. Nov. Reg. Veg. 44: 244–255 (1938).

If a name of a group proposed but not described by one author is published by another author, the word ex is used to connect the names of the two authors. The word in is used if a description by one author is published by another author. The word apud which, according to Art. 48, is to be used instead of in, if the name of the second author does not form a part of the title of a book or periodical, though perhaps better Latin, is not used in this work, partly because the distinction made seems to be of little importance and chiefly because apud has become ambiguous, having been used by some authors in the sense of ex and by others in the sense of in. See also Jour. Arnold Arb. 20: 272 (1939).

The term nomen subnudum has been used in this work for new names which cannot be accepted as validly published, but must be considered nomina nuda, though they are accompanied in the context by some information or notes giving a clue to their identity; also illustrations without analytical figures accompanying names without descriptions fall into this category.

In transfers it seems important to indicate whether the parenthetical author is cited and correctly cited either in the combination itself or in the synonymy, or whether the correct citation of the basonym is supplied by a later author, for in some cases, the author of the new combination did not cite the original author of the basonym, but a later author, or cited it as a new name, without a basonym; in these cases the supplied name of the oldest author has been placed in brackets, instead of in parentheses; e. g. Akebia quinata [Houttuyn] Decaisne (1839), based by Decaisne on Rajania quinata Thunberg (1784), but that species had been published by Houttuyn as early as 1779; another example is Rhododendron flavum [Hoffmanns.] D. Don (1834) published by D. Don as a new name without a basonym, though the species had been published as Azalea flava by Hoffmannsegg in 1826. Brackets are also used to indicate supplied dates of publications either in regard to undated publications, or not exactly or incorrectly dated publications, as volumes published in parts or fascicles bearing on the title-page only the date of the final part or inclusive dates; dates on cover-pages of fascicles can hardly be considered as properly published because they do not form part of the bound volume and usually are left out in binding; fortunately, particularly in more recent works, the dates of publication of the parts are given elsewhere in the work and are then accepted as properly published.

Misidentifications are indicated by the word "sensu" preceding the name of the author who misinterpreted the name in question; the author of the correct name with date follows at the end of the citation preceded by "non" e. g. Pinus inops sensu Bongard [1832], non Aiton (1789).

The short annotations at the end of the citations, referring mostly to the status of the name, are in Latin as customary in taxonomic publications, particularly in those intended for international use. To avoid misunderstandings, it seemed advisable to treat the botanical names as indeclinables; the correct form of the nominative and the gender is sometimes not clearly recognizable in certain case forms and this may lead to mistakes. Thus the genus Mitracarpus Zucc.

published in 1827, has been treated as neuter and spelled Mitracarpum or Mitracarpium, until in 1884 A. Gray in his Syn. Fl. N. Am. 1,2: 32 drew attention to the mistake which had been made, because the name was first published in a Latin sentence in the accusative case, though the adjective "crescentem" referring to the botanical name would have established its masculine gender. Also names like Rhus, Rhois, and Olax, Olacis and those ending in -stemma, stemmatos, and stemon, stemonis, etc., might not always be readily recognized in one of the different case forms. Changes from the original spelling in listed names are indicated by giving the original spelling in quotation marks at the end of the citation. In the same way, any difference in the wording from a preceding citation under the same name is indicated by adding the change in quotation marks.

A considerable number of names of cultivated plants appeared first in trade catalogues, price-lists and similar ephemeral publications which, with very few exceptions, have not been preserved in botanical or general libraries; only in some of the larger horticultural libraries collections of trade catalogues can be found, but the sets are often incomplete and lack mostly the older issues which usually contain the names that are most important. Hunting in trade catalogues for certain names is, moreover, a time-consuming job, and even if the name is found, there is either no description or it is unsatisfactory and the name must be classed as a nomen nudum or subnudum, so that one feels that the time spent in the search has been wasted. It is therefore desirable that at the next International Botanical Congress, the proposal of an amendment to Art. 36 by F. R. Fosberg in Am. Jour. Bot. 26: 230 (1939) be considered and voted upon, — to reject, as not validly published, botanical names listed with or without description in nursery catalogues, price-lists, advertisements in periodicals and similar publications to promote the sale of certain plants. In the present publication names published in price-lists have been accepted, as they are not yet excluded by the Rules, and are cited when they could be located, but in many instances the references have remained incomplete, since in the collections accessible to the writer these particular catalogues were lacking. Most of the names listed first in nursery catalogues were sooner or later taken up and described in dendrological works as Loudon, Arboretum and fruticetum britannicum, K. Koch, Dendrologie, Jaeger, Ziergehölze, C. Schneider, Illustriertes Handbuch der Laubholzkunde, Mouillefert, Traité des arbres et abrisseaux, Nicholson, Dictionary of gardening, Dippel, Handbuch der Laubholzkunde and many other publications on woody plants, also in horticultural periodicals and in general botanical publications. These names, however, are rarely listed with an exact reference to their original place of publication, but usually bear only the citation Hort. or Hortul. or sometimes Hort. gall., Hort. angl., Hort. germ. They should be credited to the author who first validated them by publishing a description, without or with reference to the original source of the name preceded by "ex," as Hort. ex K. Koch, Lodd. ex Loudon.

Publications like Hoffmannsegg's catalogues of which different editions have been issued from 1823 to 1842 under varying titles, some as "Preisverzeichniss," are generally considered botanical publications and the new names proposed are accepted as validly published, since they are accompanied by descriptions and citations of literature; they should be classed as belonging to the same category as the seed catalogues of botanic gardens. The listing of prices is only secondary.

In a work as the present, the Index constitutes an important part. It should be as simple and clear as possible and not complicated by the inclusion of data not absolutely necessary. Therefore author citations and indications of rank and category of names have been omitted. For a detailed account of the principles followed in the listing of the names see the remarks at the beginning of the Index, p. 601-661.

As stated in the Foreword the compilation of this work was based chiefly on the excellent library of the Arnold Arboretum supplemented by the facilities of other Harvard libraries and those of Boston. For an opportunity to work in important libraries outside of Boston the author is indebted to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences for a grant to cover traveling expenses.

The publication of this bibliography would not have been possible, if it had not been for the interest which the director of the Arboretum, Dr. E. D. Merrill, had taken in this work from the beginning and for his successful efforts to secure funds from friends of the Arboretum for financing its printing. Besides the author is indebted to him for help in the nomenclature of Rafinesquian names and of the names by other early American botanists as Bartram, Marshall and Eaton. The author is also indebted to other members of the staff in various ways: to Mr. V. C. Asmous in regard to Russian literature; to Dr. Leon Croizat for assistance chiefly in the nomenclature of families and their subdivisions; to Dr. A. C. Smith for advice concerning the nomenclature of Schizandraceae and related families; to Mr. E. J. Palmer chiefly in regard to the nomenclature of American species of Crataegus. For help in the difficult group of bamboos the author is under obligations to R. A. Young of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. For assistance in proofreading the author wishes to express his appreciation to Dr. C. E. Kobuski, Dr. Caroline K. Allen, and Dr. Lily M. Perry.

The work on this Bibliography was started in 1940, the year of my retirement from active service and was based in the beginning chiefly on bibliographical notes I had made during the preparation of the two editions of my Manual of cultivated trees and shrubs, published in 1927 and 1940; with the addition of the new woody plants described or introduced after 1940 up to the time the manuscript was ready for the printer. I was confident that the work could be finished within three or four years, for no one could foresee that soon a second world war of long duration would break out in which the United States and almost all countries of the world would become involved. The war caused a paper shortage which made printing of the work impossible during the war and also made it difficult and in some cases impossible to obtain access to new publications from foreign countries. All this delayed the completion of the work considerably.

EXPLANATION OF VARIOUS ABBREVIATIONS AND SIGNS

The abbreviations under the above heading are, for the most part, those used in connection with the citations of the botanical names. They are in Latin, as is customary in taxonomic publications, particularly those intended for international use. The references to Articles of the Rules of botanical nomenclature relate to edition 3 (1935).

App., appendix; supplementary matter, usually paged separately.

auct., auctor vel auctores; author or authors: e. g. auct. poster., auctorum posteriorum; of later authors.

basonym., basonymum; basonym: the name or epithet upon which a later combination is based. By some authors incorrectly spelled basynym.

[Cat.] in the title of lists of plants and plant names indicates a nursery catalogue or price-list.

comb. nov., combinatio nova; new combination: the transfer of a subdivisional name to another division (also called translatio nova, new transfer), or a change of rank as the change of a variety to a species or vice versa (also called status novus, new rank).

descr., descriptio; description: e. g. descr. manca, descriptione manca; description incomplete, poor.

emend., emendatus, a, um; emended or corrected: e. g. descr. emend., descriptio emendata; emended or corrected description.

e.g., exempli gratia; for example, for instance.

err., errore or per errorem; by error or mistake.

err. typogr., errore typographico; by typographical error.

exclud., excludendus, a, um; a name or specimen to be excluded from the concept of the preceding citation: e. g. exclud. sp. nonnull., excludendis speciebus nonnullis, some species to be excluded from the preceding citation.

exclus., exclusus, a, um; a name excluded from the concept of the preceding citation by its author, though belonging to the concept of the group as accepted in this work.

grad. nov., gradus novus; new grade, change to another subdivisional category without change of the combination itself, as a change of a variety to a form or a section to a subgenus or vice versa. See Jour. Arnold Arb. 22: 570 (1941) and 26: 67 (1945).

homonym., homonymum; homonym, a name duplicating a name previously published for a different group of the same rank (see Rules of botanical nomenclature, ed. 3, Art. 61).

hort., hortorum v. hortulanorum; of gardens or gardeners, sometimes specified as hort. am., American gardens; hort. angl., English gardens; hort. gall., French gardens; etc.

icon., iconis or icon., icones; figure, illustration, illustrations.

inclus., inclusus, a, um; a name or group included in the conception of the preceding citation, though not belonging in the concept of the group as accepted in this publication.

ined., ineditus, a, um; a name not yet published.

in lit., in literis; an unpublished name in a letter or manuscript.

l. c., loco citato; in the place cited; refers to a name published on the same page as in the preceding publication by the same author; see also op. cit.

lus., lusus; a subdivision of a species ranking below forma; treated in this work as an equivalent of forma.

monst., monstrositas; a subdivision of a species ranking below forma; treated in this work as an equivalent of forma.

msc., ms., plural mss., manu scriptus; manuscript; indicates an unpublished name.

mut., mutatio; mutation, a subdivision of a species ranking below forma; treated in this work as an equivalent of forma.

nom., nomen, nomen nudum; a bare name without a description or reference to a previous description or based on an illustration without analytical figures. See also nom. subnud.

nom. altern., nomen alternativum; alternative name, one of two names (nomina alternativa) simultaneously proposed for the same group. Only in the case of the names of some families, either name may be used as valid (Nom. altern. legit.); cf. Synops. Propos. Nomencl. 65 (1935) and Proc. Sixth Intern. Bot. Congr. 1: 358 (1936).

See also Nom. event., Nom. provis. and Nom. tentat.

nom. ambig., nomen ambiguum; a name which has become of uncertain meaning owing to its application by different authors for two or more species or groups. The rejection must be validated by vote of the International Botanical Congress.

nom. ambig. propos., nomen ambiguum propositum; a name proposed for rejection, but not yet voted upon.

nom. conserv., nomen conservandum; a name to be conserved though not valid according to a strict application of the Rules, but validated by vote of the International Botanical Congress or of a committee appointed for this purpose by the Congress.

nom. conserv. propon., nomen ad conservandum proponendum; a name which should be proposed for conservation.

nom. conserv. propos., nomen ad conservandum propositum; a name proposed for conservation, but not yet voted upon.

nom. dub., nomen dubium; a name of doubtful application (see Art. 63).

nom. event., nomen eventuale; a proposed name to become valid under certain conditions, not definitively proposed as a legitimate name. See also nom. provis. and nom. tent.

nom. illeg., nomen illegitimum; a name not in agreement with the Rules of botanical nomenclature.

nom. nov., nomen novum; new name, a change of a name or an epithet, usually because the name or combination was preoccupied.

nom. prae-Linn., nomen prae-Linnaeanum; pre-Linnaean name, a botanical name published before 1753 or published in a later work not employing binomial nomenclature consistently.

nom. provis., nomen provisorium; a provisional or conditional name; a name not definitively proposed or one to become valid only under certain conditions. See Proc. Sixth Intern. Bot. Congr. 1: 364-5 (1936), also Briquet, Recueil synoptique 41 (1930). Also called Nom. event. and Nom. tentat.

nom. rejic., nomen rejiciendum; a name to be rejected, either on account of being illegitimate, or having been rejected in favor of a nomen conservandum by vote of the International Botanical Congress.

nom. subnud., nomen subnudum; a name not fulfilling the conditions for valid publication (see Art. 37), but about whose application there can be little doubt from concomitant or other evidence. Also names published after 1935 (see Art. 38) without Latin description and names based on figures without analytical details (see Art. 44, 3), would fall into this category.

op. cit., in op. cit.; opus citatum, in opere citato; referring to a preceding citation of the same work with the name in question on a different page or in a different part of the work, while the term l. c. (loco citato) refers to publication on the same page.

p. p. typ., pro parte typica; as to the typical part.

pl. depict., planta depicta; e.g. quoad pl. depict., as to the plant figured.

polynom., nomen polynomiale; a name consisting of more than three words without indication of rank, while a similar name with epithets of different rank, might be termed a polynomial combination (see Introduction, p. vii).

ram., ramus; branch.

sched., in sched., scheda, schedae, in scheda; label or labels, on the label; used chiefly in connection with names on herbarium labels.

sec., secundum; according to, used chiefly in misidentifications followed by the author who misapplied the name; the author of the original application of the name given at the end of the citation preceded by "non" or "nec." See also Recomm. XXXVII.

sect., sectio; section, a subdivision of a genus, ranking below subgenus.

sensu; in the sense of, in the conception of, followed by the name of the author; usually indicating a misidentification.

sensu lato (ampliore); in a wider or broader sense, as compared with the original conception.

sensu stricto; in a restricted or narrow sense in comparison with the original conception.

ser., series; a subdivision of a genus usually below section; rarely used for a subdivision of a family. In the present work the term is used only for a subdivision below the rank of a subsection; its name consisting of an adjective in plural form, as Grandiflori, Latifoliae, Campestris (see also foot-note under Rubus (p. 284b) and Rosa (p. 296a).

syn., synonymum; synonym; e. g. pro syn., pro synonymo, as synonym; cum synonymis multis, with numerous synonyms; cum syn. plur., cum synonymis pluribus, with several synonyms.

tauton., tautonymum; a specific epithet exactly repeating the generic name, as Cedrus Cedrus (L.) Huth; an illegitimate combination (see Art. 68, 3).

textu, in textu; names appearing in the general text, not in a separate paragraph headed by the name.

uninom., uninomiale [nomen], unitary name; a single word instead of a binary combination to denote a species, being an illegitimate name (see Art. 67, 3).

var., varietas; variety, a subdivision of a species ranking below subspecies and above forms; in horticultural publications applied usually in a general sense for any subdivision of a species. Up to the beginning of the nineteenth century, Greek letters are equivalent to the term varietas, but have been used by later authors occasionally for other subdivisions of a genus (see p. 58 in Rehder, The varietal categories in botanical nomenclature (Jour. Arnold Arb. 8: 56-68. 1927).

§ usually employed as a sign for a section or series of a genus or sometimes as a subdivision of a family as in Lindley, Syn. Brit. Fl. 89 (1829) "Rosaceae § 4. Roseae"; in this work only for series, a subdivision of a genus below section or subsection.

× sign of a sexual hybrid and connecting the two or sometimes more parents of the hybrid.

+ sign of a graft hybrid and connecting the two parents of the graft hybrid.

* Conservation of the name Abies against Abies Trew is not necessary. Abies starts with Miller (1754) of which it represents the typical part and has priority over Abies Trew, Herb. Blackwell. Cent. 2 which was published after March, 1755, as the preface of Centuria 2 shows. Abies . . . Robbe of 1754 (see Little, l. c.) is not a generic name, but a prae-Linnaean polynomial of a species [Picea Abies (L.) Karsten].

* As H. macrophylla (Thunb.) Ser. is based on Viburnum macrophyllum Thunb. and therefore its nomenclatorial type differs from the phylogenetic or biological type of this species concept, it seems desirable to separate this form clearly from the phylogenetic type and from the various other forms of this species instead of citing the synonyms under the binomial. The name for this group would then be H. macrophylla f. Hortensia (Sieb.) Rehder, l. c. based on the oldest varietal name Hydrangea japonica η. Hortensia Regel of 1866. To this form belong all the preceding synonyms enumerated under H. macrophylla. The phylogenetic type is H. macrophylla var. normalis Wilson, see p. 201a.

* Pallas treated Ribes as of feminine gender (see his Fl. Ross. 1,2: 34–36), which is against classical and Linnaean usage (see also Rehder in Jour. Arnold Arb. 20: 413, 1939), and therefore used the feminine gender of the adjective diacanthus, a, am, but Poiarkova's use in 1936 of Diacantha as a name of a series is obviously an adjective in the neuter plural form, since all her names of series are adjectives in the plural form; the latter fact is also made evident by her use of the feminine plural form in 1939, namely "Diacanthae". Janczewski's sectional name "Diacantha", however, should be considered a noun, since he used nouns exclusively for his sections.

*) The plant described by Wille seems to have consisted of Sorbopyrus auricularis (Knoop) Schneid. grafted on Crataegus monogyna Jacq. Therefore the name Pirocrataegus should be rejected and, if cited at all, placed in the synonymy of Sorbopyrus auricularis; so far no hybrids, neither sexual nor graft hybrids, are known between Crataegus and Pyrus.

* In Series Hostiana, as in other subdivisions of Rubus proposed by Trattinnick, the word Hostiana is obviously not a noun of feminine gender as might be supposed in spite of its adjectival ending, but an adjective belonging to the term Series and not as usual an adjective in plural belonging to Rubus, for in that case it would be "Hostiani." Therefore it should be cited Series Hostiana and not "series Hostiana." This is an unusual terminology and does not conform to the Rules (cf. Art. 24), but from Trattinnick's enumeration of his series of Rosa in the preface (Rosac. Monog. 1: ix) it is clear that this is what he had in mind.
